I really doubt that they have Star Wars like weapons, shooting plasma rays or balls or whatever. Their efficacy would also be questionable. We already know how high powered lasers work, and they honestly aren't all that impressive in their current state. In any case, these are all point to point weapons, not WMDs. Nobody would care even if they did invent plasma weaponry.

the soviets were operating Scalar Anti Ballistic Missile antennas at Sary Shagan in the 80s it's not crazy to think something in that field has found its way over to Iran by this point, it's still yesterdays super-weapon but it's not an acknowledged one. the only reason I bring this up is becuae I'm pretty sure I saw SPI (Scalar Potential Interferometry) being used to shoot down isreali rockets during thier little war a few months ago and to do that you need a Scalar Potential Interferometer (which at least 1 did exist pretty close geographically to iran)

>Former US President Donald Trump stumbled at a rally in Pennsylvania following loud bangs, according to CNN.

>Secret Service agents escorted former President Donald Trump off stage after he fell to the ground at a rally in Butler, Pennsylvania.

>Before his fall, there was a loud noise. Agents helped him to his feet, and there was blood on his face.

>As he walked off stage, he raised his fist and shouted in response to the crowd. He was then placed into a vehicle and evacuated from the scene.

Here's the first important thing to understand, EVERYTHING you have ever been told or taught about energy, magnetism, quantum mechanics, and physics in general is a half truth. If you want the full picture, take everything you've ever learned and reverse it. Then you'll begin to understand.

China is testing futuretech in Iran to see if the US will unmask its futuretech that is a half generation progressed no more from what was developed for the USSR 20 years ago.

If China realizes that its futuretech is far in advanced of the US, and Iran steamrolls Israel and cockblocks nuclear missiles with Chinese space lasers, then China will invade Taiwan and probably for giggles send the US to the stone age.
Ironically it will be that Jews sold the prototype mark I futuretech to China 25 years ago hoping to make China the new safe haven to replace America, but China outmaneuvered them.

The tech has been criminalized in the US for 100 years. They've blacklisted entire branches of new physics since the cold war.

Imagine what could be achieved in an uninhibited environment?

It is extremely possible the Iranians have the tech, they may have remnants of Aryan genius locked up in military underground bases doing the work, or they may have simply gotten it from the Russians. In either case, if all they had were nukes the US would hardly consider them the adversary that they do. Yes I know the kikes want war with Iran, but if the US could have steamrolled them they would have already done it.

For all we know, the Iranians dug their way into deep underground sanctums full of off-world shit and have figured out how to use it.

The "vacuum" is the virtual state, it's limitless but it's also unorganized. The whole idea is you have to take chaos and organize it, and if you do that, the chaos will give you all the energy you could ever want. Plasma is just a medium that happens to be particularly good at the transformation, but all of nature achieves the same results to varying degrees. The fundamental flaw of every system of energy that has ever been devised in the post-industrial world has to do with the fact that they do not utilize the environmental balancing forces (ie. the virtual steady state flows) to their advantage. Rather they simply waste them back into the environment instead of keeping the ball rolling.

Instead of riding the wave, we throw our own opposing wave back where the energy came from, and nature says "Ok I guess we'll just take it back then", instead of us just continually reusing it ad infinitum.

Batteries are particularly good at doing this if they're pulsed/vibrated. Turns out, nature loves pulses of energy.

The purpose of what I am constructing is simple: complete destruction of the cabal. I will, if need be, singlehandedly destroy every satan worshipping kike on this planet with this technology and I will do it in front of the world. I will humble them. In the name of Christ Jesus of course, who grants me all knowledge and ability.

Unfortunately that step is necessary, but if it weren't I'd be building simple home-energy solutions that could keep your appliances running, your batteries charged, and your bodies healthy. Like Bedini's linear amplifier regulator, or Rife's machine.

If the Iranians do have something like this, they're probably trying to ionize the upper atmosphere with lasers to interfere with ballistic missiles, like some sort of force field which breaks electronics. Probably just a proof of concept, at best.

Range issues? Maybe with distance the beam gets weaker? Would probably be ineffective by the time it's gone through the atmosphere into space. The "Rods of God" would make no sense if they were orbiting at anything less than, say, two thousand km from Earth.

There's definitely a major range issue with plasma weapons, ballistically speaking, although it might work okay in space, where nothing interferes with the projectile. Scattering would still be an issue. You can't make it as focused as a laser without essentially making it a laser, which in itself can be considered a plasma weapon, but in a bit of a secondary capacity.

>> ☐ Anonymous (ID: sQFPCG5t)  03/15/25(Sat)05:47:43 No.500460834 ▶ >>500461430 >>500461502

Distance is literally of no consequence. You guys still think someone's going to be shooting beams of plasma, complete dipshittery. The weapon is gravity and time, plasma is the medium to produce the effects. Please stop being retarded.

Yeah that's why I think if they did have something it would be using lasers to make plasma where they want it (as a defensive screen) and then they call it a "plasma weapon" when it's really just a sort of laser/radar net.
